

THE PHONOGRAPH.

EMPEROR WILLIAM EXAMINES THE CURIOUS INSTRUMENT.

Interesting Experience of Inventor Edison's Lieutenant Before German's Royal Family—Kaiser William's Musical Skill.

A. T. E. Wageman, Edison's lieutenant in charge of the phonograph, had some highly interesting experiences during his recent tour of Europe with that curious instrument. While the machine was on exhibition in Heidelberg a despatch came from Emperor William, of Germany, requesting Mr. Wageman to bring the phonograph to the palace at Potsdam.

It was arranged that the interview should take place at 7 in the evening in one of the private chambers adjoining the great dining hall. The Emperor greeted his visitor cordially and without formality. There were present also the Empress, one or two court ladies, and two or three Adjutants of the Emperor's personal staff. The Kaiser impressed Mr. Wageman at once as a man of extraordinary force of character, keen perceptions, and remarkably quick intuition.

Almost his first request of Mr. Wageman was that he would make the phonograph to pieces and explain minutely the purpose of each part. This was done, and the Emperor listened attentively, often cutting short the explanation when he perceived the idea in advance of the words. When the instrument was again complete and had been put in operation, the Emperor marveled at what he heard. Mr. Wageman had taken to the palace a collection of the best cylinders in his possession. They carried on their waxen surfaces the impressions of the voices of many of the prominent personages who had visited the Edison headquarters in Paris, and many selections from the best operas which had been produced at the French capital during the exposition. There were samples, too, of the best work of the most celebrated vocal and instrumental artists then in Europe. Everything was there save the original speakers and artists themselves. A little box, two feet square, containing some dozen or more small, black, hollow cylinders, each having upon its surface hundreds of fine, almost invisible tracing, represented all that was grandest in harmony and melody that was most thrilling in contemporary eloquence. After hearing the first revelation of the hidden marvels of the box, the members of the royal party looked at the little black rolls with expressions in to which there crept suggestions of superstitious and reverence.

As one treasure after another was poured into their delighted ears the enthusiasm and wonder of the listeners were unmeasured. Manifold tests were made of the machine's perfect mimicry. It talked German, French and English with equal fluency; it sang, it whistled, it laughed, it groaned. Not till nearly midnight did the royal company weary of the entertainment, and then Mr. Wageman was permitted to depart after cordial expressions of gratitude and regard, and an earnest request that he would repeat his visit. The hour was so late that the last regular train had left for Berlin, and the Emperor ordered a special train sent out for Mr. Wageman's accommodation, as it was necessary that he should be in Berlin early in the morning.

The interest taken by the Kaiser and his household in the phonograph was by no means exhausted, and three times in all by royal request Mr. Wageman visited the palace. On his second visit he took with him a number of unused cylinders upon which to record the voices of several of the royal family, the music of the court band, and some vocal and piano selections. There were about twenty-four members of the royal household present, and Mr. Wageman was received in the private room of the Emperor. The spot was a delightful one. The room was large, some thirty by forty feet, richly furnished, but not elaborately ornamented. It had, in fact, a somewhat bare appearance. Great windows, fifteen or twenty feet high, opened into the garden, where the court band was playing, as is the custom every evening after dinner. After the first greeting, and when the phonograph had been unpacked, the Emperor asked Mr. Wageman to take the instrument entirely to pieces. The request was obeyed. Then the Emperor said he would try to explain the instrument in detail to those who had not been present on the previous occasion, and would attempt to put it together again. He asked Mr. Wageman not to help him in any way, but to correct him if he made any mistake. Mr. Wageman, with some apprehensions, agreed. The task which the Emperor set himself Mr. Wageman had never seen performed, and he didn't believe the Kaiser, or anybody not an experienced mechanic, could succeed with it. So he looked on and listened rather anxiously, puzzling his brain meantime as to how he should be able to assist the Emperor without hurting his feelings. But the dilemma was an imaginary one, and when the Emperor had finished Mr. Wageman was overcome with astonishment. William handled the various pieces skillfully and confidently, and explained the purpose of each as lucidly and positively as Mr. Wageman himself could have done. In a few minutes the dismantled machine was completely restored and it was in perfect order. When he had finished he turned to Mr. Wageman, who had not spoken during the explanation, with:

"Was that correct, Herr Wageman?"

The phonograph expert expressed his astonishment at the performance and congratulated the Emperor upon his mechanical skill, quick perceptions, and remarkable memory. The Emperor smiled slightly, and then some fresh measures of stored music and eloquence which Mr. Wageman brought with him delighted the company. While the members of the royal family were as free and informal in their treatment of Mr. Edison's representative as any host would have been in the entertainment of a guest, the officious Oberhof Marschalch did not permit the fact to be lost sight of that the young gentleman who was the master of the house was also the Emperor of Germany and the King of Prussia. He hustled about here and there obsequiously, in trying various experiments with the phonograph it was necessary after a cylinder had been once used to shave off a thin film of wax from the surface in order to remove the record thereon, and make the roll available for re-use. This shaving process is done automatically by the phonograph itself when a delicate cutting tool is substituted for the recording needle. The phonograph thus becomes an automatic lathe, and in about five minutes a cylinder is made smooth and fresh. As soon as the supply of fresh cylinders became exhausted Mr. Wageman resorted to this process. The phonograph was industriously scraping off a delicious Strauss waltz from a cylinder to make room for the childish voice of one of the little Princes, when the Oberhof Marschalch bustled up to Mr. Wageman with the words in an undertone:

"Come, you must hurry up. Don't you see his Majesty is waiting!"

Mr. Wageman explained that he couldn't hurry the machine, and that there would be no unnecessary delay. This didn't seem to satisfy the functionary, for a moment later he again urged haste, and Mr. Wageman curtly informed him that his suggestions would in no way facilitate matters. Meantime the Emperor, who perfectly understood the necessary delay, was chatting with others of the company, and would no doubt have rebuked his factotum had he observed his interference.

The principal object of the visit that evening was to make phonographic record of the voices of the three little Princes, Wilhelm, Heinrich and Adelbert. The Empress Augusta Victoria was especially desirous of preserving such a memento of the childhood of the boys, and both she and the Emperor were much interested in having the youngsters acquire themselves creditably in the performance. Wilhelm, the Crown Prince, is but six years old. Heinrich is less than five, and Adelbert is a year younger. They thought the phonograph was great larks, and in genuine boy fashion they wanted to try all sorts of experiments to see what it would do. When it came to preparing the memorial cylinders a touching incident occurred. Wilhelm reproduces his father's disposition. He is a sturdy, vigorous little fellow, full of determination and fire. He sang the German national hymn into the phonograph's faithful ear with all the vim and patriotic ardor of which he was capable. He has a true German soul for music, for when the notes came back in the test to see if the record was perfect the boy's voice was in perfect tune, and the Emperor and his wife were delighted with the results.

Then came little Heinrich, a boy of gentle disposition and delicate organism. He is a genuine, whole-hearted boy just the same, and he stood in front of the phonograph to repeat the well-known patriotic German poem beginning: "Ich hatt' einen Kameraden." The lines are full of fire and pathos, and the little orator put his whole soul into them. The Empress was deeply moved when he came to the lines where the roll of the drum is supposed to come in, but she said nothing until the phonograph repeated them. Then her eyes filled with tears, and she turned to the Emperor with the words:

"That is the Emperor Frederick's voice."

The Emperor himself was plainly touched by the resemblance. The flood of memories so strongly called up overcame the Empress, and she left the room. She came back presently, smiling sadly when little Adelbert's childish voice was being recorded on the waxen cylinder. Every one of the company who was familiar with the voice of the dead Emperor remarked the resemblance in the tones of his little grandson, and all commented upon it.

A third time Mr. Wageman visited the palace with the phonograph to explain it to a more formal company of Ambassadors, assembled at the Emperor's invitation. The practical possibilities and value of the instrument were then carefully canvassed in all their bearings, and the Emperor ordered 100 phonographs sent to various imperial departments for practical tests.

Before leaving Berlin Mr. Wageman sent to the Emperor the cylinders bearing a record of the voices of the young Princes enclosed in an elegant case, so arranged that the contents would be preserved uninjured for an indefinite time. The Emperor honored Mr. Wageman with a gift of a magnificent diamond pin, the letter W, set in brilliant, being surrounded by the imperial crown, also in diamonds.—New York Sun.

Life in a Curious Stone.

Bernard Kammerman, of Topeka, Kan., has in his possession a singular stone, which he found a few years ago on the banks of the South Platte, in Colorado. It is a small, irregularly shaped pebble of a grayish blue tint, dull and faint, like smoke, but which, if held tightly in the hand for a few minutes will communicate a series of distinct shocks like that of an electric battery, slight but powerful enough to be felt all over the body. When thus grasped, observes a correspondent of the Philadelphia Times, the pebble seems to be pulsing and throbbing as if endowed with life and produces an unmistakable exhilaration of the holder's physical and mental organizations, a very pleasant sensation, resembling that following a draught of wine.

This contact with the stone quickens the pulse and if continued increases the heart beats to an alarming extent, but without any apparent ill-effect. The pebble on being held tightly for some minutes loses its gray hue and warms to a very pale rose color, growing translucent when innumerable fine veins of a golden red can be seen running through it, glowing as if filled with a living fluid. When placed in water the stone turns to a sickly green spotted with white and cream.

Mr. Kammerman says he has had his singular find examined by the finest geologists in the country, but all declare their ignorance of its nature, which seems to be that of a mineral, though possessed of a kind of life of an electrical character.

Inspection of Watches.

The system of inspection of watches, inaugurated by the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy and Wabash Railroads, has given entire satisfaction, and is one of the new features of modern railroad-ing.

Conductors, engineers, firemen, yardmasters, foremen and switchmen come under the regulation, and the general inspector is required to state in his report the name and occupation of the employee, as well as the make and number of his watch and the number of seconds gained or lost in a given number of days during the month. All watches are regulated by a division standard clock connected by an electric arrangement with the master's clock at headquarters, from which the time is automatically given each day.—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

A Cupola Fort.

The first of the "cupola forts" to be erected in Belgium has been tested successfully. These cupolas are of huge size, and built entirely of steel. Two hundred shots from a twelve centimeter gun, loaded with a battering charge, had no effect on the cupola. Thirty-two of them are being manufactured for the war department by the Societes des Ateliers de la Meuse de Couillet et de Châtillon.—Commercial Advertiser.

A Buried Fortune Found.

It is reported that Mike Scheff, a farm hand working for Jacob Schmucker, near Tiffin, Ohio, discovered a large quantity of old gold and silver coins, estimated worth $40,000, under the house and in the ground, which had been buried for over fifty years. Schmucker promised to give Scheff half of the find, but did not do so. Scheff has brought suit against Schmucker for $20,000. Ira Cadwallader, son of a former owner of the farm, has also brought suit against Schmucker to recover his money. A coffee pot contained $100 in gold.—New York News.
